CACREP PHASES

- The Preapplication Phase: This phase involves departmental personnel laying the groundwork to pursue accreditation, including gaining administrative support for the process. Funds awarded to programs in the preapplication phase would typically be used to defray consultant costs, purchase of the CACREP Accreditation Manual, and costs associated with faculty/staff involvement in preparing for the self-study. Funds will be dispersed after NBCC receives a letter from the Department Head, acknowledging administrative support for the process.
- The Application Phase: This phase involves writing and submitting the self-study and submitting the application. It can also include responding to the initial CACREP review and submitting addendum, as required. Funds awarded to programs in the application phase would typically be used to defray consultant costs, costs associated with the self-study process, the cost of sending faculty/staff to the CACREP Self-Study Workshop, and the application fee.
- The Site Visit Phase: Funds are only awarded at this phase to programs that received a grant in the Preapplication or Application Phase. Funds awarded to qualifying programs may be used to defray the cost of the site visit.
